I chose this website because this is a popular Chinese food spot in my hometown, but I thought that the website may be confusing to navigate for people that aren't from the area since most people order through the phone. This website also has a poor conceptual model and fails a lot of accessibility assessments.

Finding Problems:

- There is an inconsistency of pictures for each order (not every order has a picture)
- There is no hierarchy or proper layout so hard to memorize where an order is
- All of the pictures don't have alt text
- Some orders are labeled with letters? No real hint to what they mean
- Most orders come with a side like rice or noodles but there is nothing clear hinting at that
- There are over 200 items on this page, feels like you just scroll forever no hierarchy

Overall with these problems combined this website for new users would be hard to learn naturally with efficiency and it has a poor conceptual model.

Accessibility:

WAVE was able to find a total of 56 errors on the website I'm redesigning. The errors were all because the images were missing alternative text. I agree with this change because without the alternative text, the contents of the image won't be available to those that can't visually see or when the image is unavailable.
